Be aware.

There's no excuse for ignorance. The web has lots of information about Fair Trade.

Over 3000 products have been Fairtrade certified and display this label.

Start by having a look at the Fairtrade Foundation site: <http://dev.fairtrade.org.uk>

Buy local products.

Fair trade applies to Scottish producers and farmers too. Support them and reduce carbon emissions from

When you can't buy local - buy fairly traded products.

Despite global warming you still can't buy Scottish bananas. Choose products with the Fairtrade mark whenever possible. This guarantees a better standard of living for the growers and helps to alleviate poverty in the developing world.

Only serve fairly traded tea and coffee at church events.

Have a church tasting session where you try out different brands and switch to your favourite Fair Trade products. Use Fair Trade sugar and biscuits too.

Lobby your local store

Find out what Fair Trade products are not available in your local supermarket. Plan a day or a week in which your church members ask the manager to stock a particular product. Use letters, phone calls and visit the store.

Think creatively.

Organise a fun event for your church family based around locally bought food and Fair Trade food.

Invite your neighbours. Find Fair Trade recipes at: <http://www.fairtradecookbook.org.uk>

Campaign with the Trade Justice Movement

International trade could help millions lift themselves out of poverty. But, as things stand, present trade rules are making poverty worse. Learn about Trade Justice and how you can campaign to get the rules changed: <http://www.christianaid.org.uk/>

Set up a Fair Trade stall.

Organise a weekly or monthly stall after church or at mid week events which stocks Fair Trade products.

Getting together with other local churches could make the ordering and organising easier. Or get a stock of Fair Trade catalogues and encourage your friends and family to order items from these. Look at the Traidcraft website to learn how to be a Fair Trader: <http://www.traidcraft.co.uk>

Finally, have fun!

Switching to Fair Trade can lead to all sorts of fun activities to raise awareness.
